Jeremy Corbyn says he can't imagine campaigning for 'Brexit'

BRITAIN'S main opposition party is clear that Britain should stay in the European Union but believes the 28-member bloc should be reformed, newly elected Labour party leader Jeremy Corbyn said yesterday.

In an opinion piece for the Financial Times, Corbyn, a left-winger who is more cautious on the EU than many of his colleagues, has moved to end confusion over his party's stance on the issue after senior figures seemingly adopted conflicting positions.

Conservative Prime Minister David Cameron is seeking to renegotiate the terms of Britain's EU membership and plans to hold a referendum by the end of 2017 on whether to remain in or to leave.

Despite a heavy election defeat in May, Labour remains influential in northern England and Wales and could be key to deciding whether Britons vote to remain inside the bloc.

"Labour is clear that we should remain in the EU. But we too want to see reform," Corbyn wrote.

He also warned Cameron that if he failed to deliver "a good package" or delivered one that reduced social gains Britain had previously won, "he needs to understand that Labour will renegotiate to restore our rights and promote a socially progressive Europe."
