Marc cooks up a new treat in Palma: See Pages Four and Five

WHEN Andy Murray played Milos Raonic at Palma Sports and Tennis Club earlier this year, he would never have thought that he would be facing the Canadian in today's Wimbledon final. Murray held a practice session with Raonic ahead of the French Open in Palma and it was one of the few times that the Davis Cup hero has played the Canadian. The session was organised by Majorcan tennis player and French Open winner Carlos Moya who is Raonic's coach. Today will be a special day for both players with Murray bidding for his second Wimbledon title. It was a final which could be said was Made in Majorca.

RAISED QUESTIONS OF NATIONAL SECURITY

Cameron sets nuclear deterrent vote for July 18

● Britain's outgoing prime minister David Cameron said yesterday he would hold a parliamentary vote on July 18 to decide on the renewal of Britain's nuclear deterrent, in an apparent move to underscore London's commitment to European security. The replacement of Trident, which was backed in principle by parliament in 2007, has raised questions about national security as Britain's vote to leave the European Union fuels doubts about its future status on the world stage. The Conservative government says the nuclear deterrent is vital to keep Britain safe in an increasingly hostile world, but some opposition figures say it is indefensible to spend billions on renewing the programme at a time of austerity cuts. "Today I can announce that we'll hold a parliamentary vote on 18 July to confirm members of parliaments' support for the renewal of a full fleet of four nuclear submarines capable of providing around-the-clock cover," Cameron said.
