Britain sends in task force to help run council after tower block fire

London.— Britain said yesterday it was sending in a task force to help run the local authority struggling to cope with the aftermath of a deadly London tower block blaze which killed at least 80 people.

Kensington and Chelsea council has been criticised by victims' relatives and survivors for its handling of the disaster in Grenfell Tower on 14 June and its leader quit last week over the response to the fire. "The scale of the recovery effort needed on the Lancaster West estate in the months to come cannot be underestimated," communities secretary Sajid Javid said.

"Support to survivors, the families and friends of those who lost their lives and residents in the wider community must and will be ongoing.

"The challenge of providing that support is and will continue to be significant."

Prime minister Theresa May promised that all residents from the tower would be offered good temporary homes in the local area within three weeks but, with that deadline due yesterday, many remain in emergency accommodation after rejecting as unsuitable the premises they had been offered.

There has also been anger at the failure to provide definitive answers about those who are missing since the fire.

Police have said 80 people were dead.
