May joins 'pooper' party as Catalan figurine

Barcelona.—Britain's Theresa May has joined the ranks of the famous and powerful in Catalonia as a traditional Christmas figurine.

But with her dignity dented by widespread condemnation of her Brexit plan, she may consider the recognition a mixed blessing.

The hand-painted clay statuettes, known as "caganers" or "poopers", are depicted with their pants down. The longstanding tradition in the north eastern Spanish region is for them to be hidden among nativity scenes, to be spotted by family and friends. The British prime minister, along with a Ziggy-Star-dust-era David Bowie, are notable additions this year. See inside.

Sterling pounded over Brexit fears

The pound languished near 20-month lows yesterday, with reports that more politicians are calling for a second Brexit referendum doing little to force the currency out of a narrow trading range.

With British Prime Minister Theresa May facing deadlock in parliament over her deal to leave the European Union and the bloc offering little so far, calls for a second referendum are growing louder.

Against the euro, the pound fell 0.1 percent to 0.90 pence. See Full Reports Inside Today.

May sticking up her deal despite outcry

London.— British Prime Minister Theresa May is pressing on with her deal to leave the European Union, her spokesman said yesterday, rejecting calls for a second referendum or to test support for different Brexit options in parliament.

After a tumultuous week in which she survived a confidence vote and sought last-minute changes to a Brexit agreement reached with Brussels last month, May faces deadlock over her deal in the British parliament. See inside.
