Palma.—The Bulletin election campaign videos from the major political parties contesting this weekend's local and European elections will give some hope to the parties on the right of Spanish politics. Last week the Bulletin recorded campaign videos in English with the main political parties in an effort to make the local elections easier to understand for foreign voters. These videos appear on our website (www.majorcadailybulletin.es). The most viewed

In second place is Vox, the right wing party which has been gaining ground in Spain followed by centre-right Ciudadanos, the Spanish Socialist Party (PSOE), the Majorcan nationalist Mes and the left wing Podemos.

EU's Verhofstadt says Brexit is a "tragedy for Europe", but unified it

European Union liberal lawmaker Guy Verhofstadt said yesterday that Britain's vote to leave the bloc was a "tragedy for Europe" but had the effect that nobody else on the continent wanted to see their country leave.

"Brexit is in fact a tragedy for Europe," Verhofstadt, a former liberal prime minister of Belgium and the European parliament's main liaison on Brexit, told a news conference in the Hungarian capital. "When a big country like the UK is leaving the EU it's difficult to say it's fantastic." "But since Brexit in most countries people don't want an exit of their country. Nobody wants any more a Nexit, the Dutch going out, or Frexit, the French going out.... what we see since Brexit is that the European idea is more popular than ever."

He added he saw "a lot of irony" that a country that wants to leave in the end has to organise European elections.
