MAJORCA STILL TOP SPOT FOR BRITONS NEXT YEAR

● Analysing data using Google Trends, villa holiday provider Villa Plus has revealed the fastest-growing destinations based on the most popular searches in peak family holiday season. For Britons looking to book a 2020 trip, popular destinations such as Majorca, Albufeira and Tenerife remain top spots.

LOVE ISLAND HOST DENIES ASSAULTING BOYFRIEND

● Former Love Island presenter Caroline Flack yesterday pleaded not guilty to assaulting her boyfriend with a lamp.

Police found her partner Lewis Burton covered in blood after being called to reports of a man being assaulted at the 40-year-old's home in north London on 12 December, a court heard.

However, Highbury Corner Magistrates' Court was told tennis player Burton did not support the prosecution.

Flack will stand trial at the same court on 4 March.

The court heard the alleged attack occurred after Flack found texts on her boyfriend's phone while he was asleep, leading her to believe he was cheating.

"He said he had been asleep and was hit over the head by Caroline with a lamp, causing a visible cut to his head," prosecutor Katie Weiss said.

"She had also smashed a glass and she had sustained an injury."

The court heard how Burton made a call to 999 in which he was "almost begging the operator to send help".

When a police officer arrived at the Islington flat, both Flack and Burton were covered in blood and the officer "likened the scene to a horror movie", Weiss said.

Weiss told the court Flack was disruptive while in police custody, saying she flipped over a table and had to be "restrained on the ground".

Flack was released on bail on the condition she does not contact Burton directly or indirectly or attends his address.

Morris had made an application to have these bail conditions lifted, arguing that they "remain a couple" and wanted to spend Christmas together.
