Open up more routes to travel, says Heathrow

London.— The bosses of British Airways and London's Heathrow Airport urged the UK government yesterday to open up more routes for travel, including to the United States, and to simplify the testing hurdles needed to fly.

Britain lifted a ban on international movement yesterday but the government has designated only 12 countries and territories safe for quarantine-free travel on its "green list", limiting any recovery in the industry.

"What's crucial is that travel becomes easier for people," said British Airways Chief Executive Sean Doyle at a joint press conference.

He said a meaningful return of flying this summer, needed to help airlines and travel companies survive after over a year of COVID-19 restrictions, would require the government to relax some measures. But there is scant political appetite for doing so.

Ministers have said people should not go on holiday to countries which are not on the green list, and Prime Minister Boris Johnson said on Friday that it would not be extended any time soon because of the risk of new variants. Heathrow said the limited reopening meant that it had 11,000 people flying out on Monday.
