A STORMY LAST WEEKEND OF SUMMER

Palma.—Astronomical autumn starts this coming Wednesday (September 22), and the final weekend of summer will be marked by unsettled weather. For Majorca, the Aemet met agency has issued a yellow alert for rain today for the whole of the island - rainfall of 25 millimetres per hour, accompanied by storms. The alert is active from 9am to 5pm and follows yesterday's yellow alert for the east, interior and north of the island.

The alert doesn't apply to Minorca, Ibiza or Formentera. As of yesterday afternoon there were no alerts in place for tomorrow, although Aemet spokesperson Rubén Del Campo wasn't ruling out storms in the Balearics. Atlantic fronts are causing the unsettled weather. Areas of the mainland forecast to be most affected on Saturday are the Pyrenees, Aragon, Catalonia and part of Valencia. Temperatures will remain high in regions less affected by the fronts - up to 34C in Murcia and Andalusia. Tomorrow, temperatures will recover, with the exception of certain regions. Highs in Majorca will be down, but will still be around 26C.

The unsettled weather is due to continue into next week, current forecasts indicating rain at times in Majorca and midweek highs (for the start of autumn) of 22 to 23 degrees Celsius.

England eases COVID-19 rules for international travellers

London.— England set out measures to boost international travel yesterday, abandoning expensive COVID-19 testing requirements for fully vaccinated travellers, scrapping its traffic light system and adding eight countries to its safe list.

Travellers returning to England from Turkey, Pakistan, and the Maldives will not have to quarantine on their return as they are removed from the so-called COVID red list for travel, British transport minister

Grant Shapps said. Shapps also said under the new proposals destinations will simply be ranked low or high risk, instead of red, amber and green.

“We're making testing easier for travel,” he said on Twitter. “From Monday 4 October if you're fully vaccinated you won't need a pre-departure test before arrival into England from a non-red country and from later in October, will be able to replace the day two PCR test with a cheaper lateral flow,” he added.
